What a Presidential candidate seems to need is a hand-shaking machine with a baby-kissing attachment.

Under the circumstances, the Kaiser's hope-for-the-least-unpleasant success to his people has one serious defect. They can't eat it.

If the Bourassa faction were as anxious to help save France as they are to take advantage of the situation to wheedle concessions out of the Privy Council, Quebec would not be pointed to as a province which has failed to do what was expected of it.

The Young Turks having thrown in their lot with Germany, and Germany being now likely to get beaten, the opposing party propose to oust the Young Turks and make overtures to the Allies for a separate peace, which would preserve Turkey. Trust the Turk to see some means of cheating the gallow.

Business men of Edmonton—Edmonton, mind—have found a Rotary Club, whose motto is the Golden Rule applied to business. Similar clubs have been formed in a good many cities on both sides of the line. Yet some people persist in telling us that the world is not growing better, if it is not actually growing worse, perhaps it is their own little world they mean.

Now that "hardheaded business men" in that and other cities are undertaking to conduct their business operations according to the requirements of the Golden Rule, how would it be if the ladies started a move to bring social life in line with the modern standards of walk and conversation? After all, it is any woman to gorge in a business deal than to gossip!

The smashing defeat of the Turks near the Suez Canal is doubly gratifying. It helps to bring nearer the day when Entente shall wipe out the stigma of allowing the Turk to continue to mislead and it shows that the British Empire has finally got in position to land men and munitions where they are needed in numbers and quantities proportionate to the job. If we had reached that point of efficiency six months ago, Townsend would not have starved into surrender on the Tigris.

The Berlin official news agency gives out the news that during the war Germany has saved banks increased 250,000,000 marks. Of this, however, the German grabber, 235,000,000 marks for war loans. If the country goes broke, as it is an excellent possibility if it doing, the money might as well have been thrown into the fire so as the owners of it are concerned. The German people will do well to count their savings and the war is over and the bills paid. And the sooner they force their Government to capitulate the more likely they are to have something left to count. These facts ought to begin to suggest themselves to the German working people, who are spending their days piling up money for the Government to blow away in powder.

A war was never won by underestimating the strength of the enemy.

According to Amsterdam reports, German soldiers are being taken from the front and drafted into the armies. The German public may look for an Imperial message announcing that the fleet has been "victorious" there is no object in keeping able-bodied men loafing about on ships which have no enemy to fight. But meantime the price of sausage continues to go up!

The great forest fire in Northern Ontario is a tragic reminder that Canada is one of the few countries still having the "valuable materials for a catastrophe of the kind of such dimensions. The timbered areas of the earth grow smaller and fewer with the passing years. Therefore, the remaining ones grow more valuable and more worthy of preservation. Therefore, but for the overwhelming horror of the lives lost, the great conflagration would excite great attention as a national disaster. The fact that the fire is not being accompanied by a destruction of valuable property adds another and stronger reason for preventive measures.

The Kaiser's message to his people on the anniversary of his strike for world power is conspicuously lacking in the boastful confidence with which he called them to arms to crush the enemies of neighboring nations and establish him as ruler of the world. It is a reminder to the past that he has called their attention, and their references to the future are notably wanting in definiteness of outlook. The Kaiser's message is a reminder to them now is the hope that Germany cannot be beaten. That the Allies can be beaten he does not suggest in any previous statement. He would almost seem to be getting loose to the Imperial authority that the world power propaganda has missed connection somewhere, and that the best to be hoped for is a drawn battle with the chance of getting ready for another try when the circumstances are more propitious. His view is that Germany has been victorious the blame for continuing the war should rest upon the Allies for obstinately refusing to acknowledge that they are beaten and to stop their war. They will not go out further resistance. From which it would seem that the Allies are in an unhappy frame of mind. Having "conquered" the world, they are faced with the provoking fact that the defeated nations refuse to believe it, and if they keep on refusing there is only a prospect of indefinite slaughter—for which, of course, they may be held morally responsible, but the practical outcome is only a prospect of continuing in keeping with his plans. With this view there is little fault to be found with the German attitude. They have fought valiantly and their enemies will not question. And that the prospect of Kultur being thrust upon the ruins of the world civilization is growing less there can be no reasonable doubt. The one point of difference is as to the desirability of Germany's Imperial Majesty to the contrary, the Allies have a very positive notion that Germany can be beaten.

And however shocking it may be to his feelings they propose to take chances on being forgiven for riding into the "conquered" world and the slaying of barbarians, who he seeks to establish in place of the ideals of national liberty and individual right.

The Irish Crisis and the War From the fact that the British Government has refused to allow to fall into the background, is not that the fact that the British Government has reached the very crisis of the moment, or if we fall in maintaining a concentration of energy, the war of government. We may easily throw away all that we have gained. The Unionist leaders must realize that if we make a mistake, we shall be in a position to make a mistake. The Unionist leaders must realize that if we make a mistake, we shall be in a position to make a mistake. The Berlin official news agency gives out the news that during the war Germany has saved banks increased 250,000,000 marks. Of this, however, the German grabber, 235,000,000 marks for war loans. If the country goes broke, as it is an excellent possibility if it doing, the money might as well have been thrown into the fire so as the owners of it are concerned. The German people will do well to count their savings and the war is over and the bills paid. And the sooner they force their Government to capitulate the more likely they are to have something left to count. These facts ought to begin to suggest themselves to the German working people, who are spending their days piling up money for the Government to blow away in powder.

NOT GENERAL IMPRESSION.

Editor Bulletin:—I am sorry to see in your issue of Friday last, a statement from the A.M.C. recruiting office, that a feeling seemed to pervade, that men were required to pass the first aid course before enlistment. Anyone knowing anything about the branch of the army knows it to be absurd, as no man can enlist without the first aid course without acquiring the knowledge, having during the past winter been brought to the attention of a number of soldiers and civilians in the centre of first aid work in the city. I have never yet heard such a statement made.

I have been men going through the course, not because they believed it was required, but with the knowledge that it would help them to improve their rank after enlistment. However little I know of enlistment, but I am sure that if the R.A.M.C. under the Imperial name, but in reality a better name, if he has a knowledge of the requirements of the course, he will not correct the statement in the report given to the recruiting office. The stretcher work with a view to quicken the mind of the soldier, and I am sure that if the recruiting office is not so stupid as to believe that the statement is true, they will not correct it. Yours truly, Thos. H. B. 1016.

Dr. Woodworth Deals With Vital National Subject—Menace of Unrestricted Immigration

Two problems of vital importance to the well-being and development of the national life of Canada were considered at the conference on Rural Leadership at the University of Alberta yesterday morning. The treatment and care of the feeble-minded, and co-operation, the questions forming the subjects of two addresses by J. S. Woodworth, director of Bureau of Social Research for Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba, than which the problem of the feeble-minded is a practical demonstration on the production of field crops by H. A. Woodworth, dean of the faculty of agriculture at the university.

"There are two things," said Dr. Woodworth, in his address on the feeble-minded, "if a person is insane he can be a menace to the community. It is his duty to let him loose as there is no reason why he should be confined to a hospital." MORE PRAISE FOR FREDDIE WELSH

Critic Says Welshman Has Paved the Way For a Fortune

Commenting on the recent Welsh-Lionard bout a critic in the New York Times writes as follows: "Freddie Welsh did more than win by Benny Leonard. He paved the way for a brand new fortune, one that is bound to come his way, because every promoter in the country wants his services. His amazing performance made him an instant star all over again. Many thought that the little Welshman had come to the end of his rope. Leonard had beaten him so easily before that the chances of Welsh being in there at the end of ten rounds that time seemed exceedingly slim. Leonard had been ground to the limit of perfection. His friends felt their money that he would flatten the king of the light-weight ring and they didn't ask a million for one victory. They were disappointed when they saw the 'old man' through the youthful period. When it was all over many of Leonard's most ardent admirers said that his chances of ever whipping Welsh were better than his chances of being a champion. Welsh is a master of ringcraft; he has a thing about him that is a style that he doesn't know how to lose. He has the heart of a lion. He will make him look like a pretentious boy. Welsh studies a man's actions in the ring, and once learned, he never forgets them. The effect he boxes a man the reader becomes a student of boxing. The last time when Charlie White has faced him, Welsh kindled a fire that the last move that White is to make. He probably could have won the fight that White tried several before the punches are even started."
